

Maximilian Klich, Sebastian Wilczek, Zoltan Donko, Ralf Peter Brinkmann

A non-neutral regime of radio-frequency atmospheric pressure plasma jets: Simulation and modeling

Radio-frequency-driven atmospheric pressure plasma jets play an essential role in many technological applications. This work studies the characteristics of these discharges in a regime where the conventional structure of a quasi-neutral bulk and an electron depleted sheath does not develop, and the electrons are instead organized in a drift-soliton-like structure that never reaches quasi-neutrality.